

CONGRESS FACES LONG FIGHT OVER RAIL LEGISLATION

New factors are entering the rail road legislative situation, and, although the President when he submitted his railroad message to Congress expressed wish for early action, it will be weeks and probably months before a railroad measure is put through House and Senate and finally written into law.

The conference of railway executives in New York, at which it was decided to try to limit Government control to the period of the war, will tend to intensify the struggle which is ahead over this feature of the proposed legislation. The bill as it stands now provides for Government control until otherwise ordered by Congress. In other words, unless Congress should affirmatively say otherwise, Government control would go on indefinitely.

Sanctions Provision.

The Interstate Commerce Commission sanctions this provision, and it was at one time understood here that leading railroads did not object, because they felt that to have Government control end abruptly with the end of the war might be hurtful to their properties. But now it is clear the railroads do object. They, undoubtedly perceive, what is the fact, the strong tendency in Congress toward Government ownership, and they are concerned over and are continuing to see that they can take steps to block it now if it is likely to be impossible to prevent it later.

Not only the Government ownership issue, which is really what is involved in the attempt to limit control to the war period, is becoming more acute, but also the question of compensation and the question of whether the Interstate Commission is to be shown of ratemaking powers and made a rubber stamp bureau under the director general.

Big Sum Involved.

Senators and House members who object to paying the roads as much as they want for their use or as much as the President advocates and as the railroad bill provides for, take the position that billions of dollars of the public's money are involved. They say that the higher the compensation the Government gives the roads for use the higher will be the valuations the roads put on their properties, and the result will be that the amount of Government control the roads ever for purpose of ownership it will be found the price it has to pay has been shoved upward to an enormous amount.

Senator Cummings, ranking Republican Senator of the Senate, emphasized this today. He calculates that the Administration railroad bill proposes to give the roads for their use by the Government at least $250,000,000 more a year than they are entitled to and probably more. He pointed out that if this is applied to the valuation of the roads provided the Government takes them over for permanent ownership, it will mean increased valuation of $2,000,000,000 or more.
